Back to School. Part 2: The Ongoing Struggle to Educate the World's Children.

Films for the Humanities & Sciences (2006)

"In 2003, the Wide angle program Time for School profiled children in seven countries--Afghanistan, Benin, Brazil, India, Japan, Kenya, and Romania--as they started their first year of school, often in the face of great adversity. Three years later this Wide angle episode returns to visit each child, updating the progress of their educational and personal development. The similarities and contrasts that emerge among the lives of these young people provide rich insight into the disparities of opportunity around the globe--underscoring the hard fact that more than 100 million children worldwide are growing up without schooling"—Container.

[Alexandria, VA] : PBS DVD Video, (2003)

In 1968, after the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jane Elliott, a public school teacher in Riceville, Iowa, divided her all-white third-graders into blue-eyed and brown-eyed groups for a lesson in discrimination. On successive days, each group was treated as inferior and subjected to discrimination. A 1970 documentary, Eye of the storm, presented this experiment on television. This documentary reunites the teacher and students 15 years after the experiment to analyze its enduring effects.

(The) Education of Shelby Knox.

InCite Pictures, [2005]

Documentary which presents the political activism of high school student Shelby Knox. The film begins in 2001 when Shelby Knox, a 15-year-old high school sophomore, joins the Lubbock Youth Commission, a group of high school students empowered by the mayor to give Lubbock's youth a voice in city government. Knowing that Lubbock, Tex. had one of the highest rates of teen pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease in the nation, the Youth Commission questioned Lubbock's abstinence-only sex education policy. Shelby, a politically conservative Southern Baptist who had pledged abstinence until marriage, became the group's most vocal proponent of comprehensive sex education. The documentary explores other issues beyond the debate over abstinence-only versus comprehensive sex education. It portrays Shelby's family's struggle with teen independence; Shelby's struggle with her Christian faith; Shelby's widening activism into other issues, such as the creation of a Gay/Straight Alliance at her high school; issues of tolerance; and the power of political activism.

Hamster Cocktails: The Truth About Hazing.

[Distributed by] Security on Campus, c2004

In our society, hazing is a problem that is out of control. Without intervention, the vicious cycle of hazing will continue, and innocent people will continue to be physically and emotionally hurt or killed. Hamster Cocktails was designed to shock high school and college students into thinking twice before they allow themselves to be put in a hazing situation. The documentary crew traveled to two towns where horrific hazing incidents occurred. By revisiting the scenes of the crimes and talking with the people involved, the documentary reveals how seemingly innocent decisions can lead to tragedy and death.

Learning in America.

WETA (1989)

The Education Race. High school students in other countries, notably Japan, graduate with significantly more sophisticated math and science skills and are better prepared for employment than Americans. Takes you to schools throughout America and Japan to examine these differences in detail.

Upstairs/Downstairs. Critics argue that the U.S. has created a two-tiered educational system: one consisting of well-funded public and private schools, the other made up of schools in the urban and rural areas that lack the resources necessary to provide an equal standard of education. Examines why children are falling through the cracks in the system, as well as, some programs that are making a difference.

Teach Your Children. The argument of textbook reform is examined along with the role of technology in the classroom. There is also growing concern about the teaching of the humanities: are we failing to instill ethical values in today's students?

Wanted: A Million Teachers. Attracting talented individuals to the field is a major problem. Many teachers in the system complain of "burn-out". Focuses on the American teacher and the crisis in teaching today.

Paying the Freight. Although virtually everyone is in agreement that U.S. schools need reform, there is little consensus on the specifics. Do we need to spend more on education, or spend our money more effectively? President George Bush talks about the future of learning in America.

Making Schools Work, With Hedrick Smith.

Films for the Humanities & Sciences
(2006)

"Amidst a gloomy climate of failing schools and the stringent No Child Left Behind legislation, some communities have created a small revolution, achieving gains with children others had given up on--with implications for schools nationwide. In this penetrating documentary, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Hedrick Smith travels from inner city to rural town to observe how some districts and reform models are making a difference: the Success for All reading program; the Comer Process; KIPP, the Knowledge Is Power Program; and High Schools That Work, a program that links academics to work-oriented learning. The video also spotlights important district-wide reforms in New York City, San Diego, and Charlotte, North Carolina. The lesson? Learn from schools that work, spread their methods widely, and keep updating them for continuous improvement in student achievement. Interviews with Yale's James Comer, Johns Hopkins' Robert Slavin, and reformers Gene Bottoms and Anthony Alvarado, among others, help frame this cogent report"--Container .

(A) Touch of Greatness.

First Run Features, c2004

A documentary on the work of Albert Cullum, an elementary school teacher for over twenty years and a pioneer in modern American public education. Championing an unorthodox educational philosophy, Cullum regularly taught his elementary school children literary masterpieces, most notably the works of Shakespeare, Sophocles and Shaw. Combining interviews with Cullum and his former students with archival footage originally filmed by director Robert Downey, Sr., the film documents the unusual work of a school teacher who embraced creativity, and who sought to foster his students' motivation and self-esteem through the use of poetry, drama and imaginative play. "A touch of greatness": Featuring Albert Cullum and elementary students of Westchester County, NY. Cullum works with the students to put on various theatrical productions of Shakespeare's plays, the process of which is captured by the camera, and narrated by the students themselves. "Literature a-go-go": An experimental film featuring students of Westchester County, NY performing and interpreting various pieces of Shakespeare's plays, as well as engaging in other Cullum-led activities. Depicts examples of Cullum's mixing of poetry, drama, and play to foster educational motivation. "From sea to shining sea": A visual montage accompanied by an audio recording of Cullum teaching a class of first grade students geography. Provides an example of Cullum's method for fostering student participation through creative activities
