Abstract

The Union Pacific Collection comprises the original corporate records of the Union Pacific Railroad's operations in Las Vegas but also including southern Nevada, Utah, southern California and Los Angeles. The collection dates from 1902 when Montana Senator William Clark began construction of his San Pedro, Los Angeles, & Salt Lake railroad linking the Union Pacific's mainline in Utah with Los Angeles and southern California to approx. 1967. The collection documents the purchase of the land (the original Stewart ranch) and the construction of the original depot and town which became modern Las Vegas. The collection also contains the records of the Las Vegas Land & Water Company, a subsidiary of the railroad, formed in 1905, to handle all the railroad's land transactions. Besides office files, containing correspondence, reports, leases, various legal, governmental and financial documents, etc., the collection contains large and small format maps, architectural and engineering drawings; published technical reports; railroad operational manuals; bound legal briefs; ledgers; payroll and receipt books. The collection documents the railroads and includes the records of the Land and Tax, Law, Engineering & Industrial Development departments, as well as the personal files of Walter Bracken, the Union Pacific's special representative in Nevada and vice president of the Las Vegas Land and Water Company. The collection contains more than 300,000 pages of correspondence, documents, maps and blue prints organized into more than 4100 files spanning approx. 175 linear feet. There are in addition over 5200 maps, blue prints, drawings and tracings. The Union Pacific Collection is the largest and most comprehensive historical collection documenting the early history of Las Vegas, and one of the most significant collections relating to the Union Pacific, and railroads in general, in the United States.

Organizational History

At the turn of the century Montana copper-king and Senator William A. Clark incorporated the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad intending to connect the Los Angeles port of San Pedro, California with Salt Lake City, Utah. The Oregon Short Line, a subsidiary of E.H. Harriman's Union Pacific Railroad, which already owned a right-of-way, also intended to develop a Salt Lake-Los Angeles route. After frantic filing and counter-filing of survey maps and an aggressive track-laying race through the Meadow Valley Wash, the two railroads resolved their conflict in 1903 with an agreement on joint ownership of the Salt Lake Route by Clark and Harriman. The tracks reached the site of Las Vegas, Nevada from Utah in October 1904 and from California in January 1905. Las Vegas was a division point on the railroad; the town site was surveyed and lots auctioned on May 15, 1905. The railroad established a subsidiary company, the Las Vegas Land and Water Company to administer the town site and other property, and its water. The railroad operated under the name of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad until 1921 when Clark sold his interest to the Union Pacific Railroad and retired.

The Salt Lake Route, as it was known, had always been controlled by the Union Pacific, despite Sen. Clark's being a titular partner, and his brother J. Ross being a 2nd Vice President, but after 1921 it was entirely the Union Pacific, one part of the nation's largest rail system, with its headquarters in Omaha, and offices in Los Angeles. The railroad would be the biggest business, landowner and employer in Las Vegas for many years, controlling not just its water system but also tracts of industrial, commercial, and residential developments which it leased, sold, serviced and maintained. The railroad was inextricably bound and engaged in all the business, political and civic issues which faced the growing city of Las Vegas, and its files document almost all aspects of life in the city from water shortages, tourism and civic promotion to strikes and labor unrest. In Las Vegas it was a Public Utility. And, besides constructing track, spurs, buildings and facilities and for its own operations in Las Vegas and other stations along its route, it also served a growing number of federal installations. As a national transportation industry it was subject to all the federal bureaucratic oversight, which was intensified during wars. The Engineering department, for example, during World War II, maintained a whole file series on "War Conditions". As the railroad expanded and promoted tourism as an important part of its passenger business, it built facilities in neighboring National Parks including the Lodge at Zion and Bryce Canyons and the Grand Canyon.

The national railroads, as intricately complex and far-flung industrial and business organizations, were the exemplars of later 19th and 20th century corporate bureaucracy. Bureaucracy which generated massive amounts of paper and files, organized in sometimes arcane "duplex numeric" (filing by general subjects which are assigned series numbers), sometimes simple alphabetical filing systems. Copies of the same document might be filed under different subjects by different departments. All decisions, no matter how petty (whether the local agent could buy a car and what kind, or whether the agent could have modern toilet facilities built in his house) were reviewed by a complex hierarchy of officials with increasingly complex departmental structures. And all decisions and transactions required multiple copies for review by multiple offices in Las Vegas, Los Angeles and Omaha. Most departments maintained local offices: for example there was a railroad attorney in Las Vegas who reported to the Legal Department in Los Angeles, the local engineering office in Las Vegas likewise reported to the chief engineer in Los Angeles. The Los Angeles office also handled all accounts and receipts both from the railroad and the Las Vegas Land & Water Company. Decisions requiring corporate authorization were made in Omaha, whose officers closely monitored not only local railroad operations but state and local political issues as well. Legal matters from contracts, leases, law suits, labor relations, freight charges, to applications and permits for the appropriation of water and the digging of wells, anything which was regulated by either state or federal agencies, went through the Law Department. All construction, surveys, maintenance of buildings, track or water pipes went through the engineering department. There was a file for every lot, building and house in the Land and Tax department. And all the corporate records from minutes of executive board meetings to reports filed with the Public Service Commission to payroll ledgers were meticulously filed.

Collection Scope and Content Summary

The Union Pacific Collection comprises the original corporate records of the Union Pacific Railroad's operations in Las Vegas but also including southern Nevada, Utah, southern California and Los Angeles. The collection dates from 1902 when Montana Senator William Clark began construction of his San Pedro, Los Angeles, & Salt Lake railroad linking the Union Pacific's mainline in Utah with Los Angeles and southern California to approx. 1967. The collection documents the purchase of the land (the original Stewart ranch) and the construction of the original depot and town which became modern Las Vegas. The collection also contains the records of the Las Vegas Land & Water Company, a subsidiary of the railroad, formed in 1905, to handle all the railroad's land transactions. Besides office files, containing correspondence, reports, leases, various legal, governmental and financial documents, etc., the collection contains large and small format maps, architectural and engineering drawings; published technical reports; railroad operational manuals; bound legal briefs; ledgers; payroll and receipt books. The collection documents the railroads and includes the records of the Land and Tax, Law, Engineering & Industrial Development departments, as well as the personal files of Walter Bracken, the Union Pacific's special representative in Nevada and vice president of the Las Vegas Land and Water Company. The collection contains more than 300,000 pages of correspondence, documents, maps and blue prints organized into more than 4100 files spanning approx. 175 linear feet. There are in addition over 5200 maps, blue prints, drawings and tracings. The Union Pacific Collection is the largest and most comprehensive historical collection documenting the early history of Las Vegas, and one of the most significant collections relating to the Union Pacific, and railroads in general, in the United States.

The collection conforms in scope and content to all the corporate functions and structure of the railroad (reflected in the departments and series in which the collection is organized) and its two major components, the Union Pacific Railroad and its subsidiary, the Las Vegas Land & Water Company. The Las Vegas Land & Water Company files primarily relate to the physical development of the city of Las Vegas and the management of its properties and water system. The railroad files pertain generally to the operations of the railroad itself. In Las Vegas, these two functions were combined in the person of the railroad's local agent, for most of the period covered by the collection, Walter R. Bracken, who was also Vice-President of the LVL&W Company, and the railroad's local functionary. Bracken kept his own files in Las Vegas, but the bulk of the company files were kept in the railroad's divisional offices in Los Angeles. When the Las Vegas railroad office was closed in 1960 those files were transferred to Los Angeles, so this collection, which was recovered from the Union Pacific warehouse in Los Angeles, contains both office files from Las Vegas and files that were always maintained in Los Angeles. While Walter Bracken's files were, apparently, kept separate after being moved to Los Angeles, the files of the various Los Angeles offices were merged and combined as those offices evolved over time. The series into which the collection is currently organized reflect to some extent the original filing systems of the various officers, agents and offices but also later re-organizations of filing systems as the corporate structure evolved. Some of Bracken's original LVL&W Co. files were also transferred to the Las Vegas Valley Water District when the water company's facilities were turned over to the water district in 1954.

The series and subseries are as follows with corresponding pages numbers of the inventory. While the original internal organization of the files within the series and subseries were retained as much as possible given their storage by the railroad, and their later transport to UNLV, the order in which the series follow is arbitrary (although vaguely chronological), reflecting the physical formats (e.g. oversize materials and bound volumes) and arrangement of boxes when transferred to UNLV.
