Biographical Note

Walter B. Gibson was an American author and professional magician. He was born in Germantown, Pennsylvania on September 12, 1897. He wrote over a hundred books on magic, true crime, and games. He was a ghost writer for Sidney H. Radner, Harry Houdini, and Harry Blackstone, Sr. Gibson was most famous for his success with the pulp fiction character The Shadow, featured in comic books, magazines, and radio shows. Gibson died in Kingston, New York on December 6, 1985.

Scope and Contents Note

The Walter Gibson Typescripts of Books on Gambling consist of manuscripts written by Walter Gibson in the 1940s. The collection includes three typescript copies of manuscripts titled, So you Want to be a Crapshooter? Or All Craps are Crooked; Poker and How to Play It; and How Gamblers Win at Cards. There are handwritten notes on the typescripts.

Gibson ghost-wrote these books for Sidney Radner (1919-2011), who authored several books on card games and was considered an expert on crooked gambling and detecting cheaters at cards. Radner was best known as the steward of one of the world’s largest Houdini collections and performed under the name “Rendar the Magician.”
