Historical Note

In 2010, Tony Hsieh, CEO of the online retail store Zappos, made the decision to moved the corporate headquarters from Henderson to downtown Las Vegas. He would soon focus on transforming the downtown area into a residential, business, and technology center. This move would be intertwined with his other business ventures which would soon be termed the "Downtown Project" and bring in new restaurants, retailers, and technological opportunities to downtown Las Vegas. One of the ideas behind this venture is to preserve innovation at Zappos while creating a hybridization of the company with the urban environment around it. The Downtown Project was officially launched in January 2012 with $350 million investment to spur the redevelopment of downtown Las Vegas. As of 2015 it includes a wide range of businesses like the Downtown Container Park, new restaurants including EAT, Fremont East Studios, the Learning Village, and a state-of-the-art performance theater called Inspire.
