Biographical Note

Pioneer, engineer, and surveyor J. T. McWilliams was born in Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada, on December 10, 1863. In 1879, McWilliams moved to Detroit, Michigan, before settling in Chicago, Illinois in 1883. While in Chicago, McWilliams studied civil engineering at the University of Chicago, and in 1884 he began surveying for the Northern Pacific Railroad. In 1893, he was appointed a delegate to the National Irrigation Congress in Los Angeles, California by the governor of South Dakota. While in Southern California, McWilliams pursued surveying work in Needles, California. While in Needles, he met his eventual wife Iona, and they were married at Fort Mohave in 1897.

For the next four years, McWilliams designed municipal water systems for towns in Arizona and California. In 1901, the McWilliams Family moved to Goodsprings, Nevada, and they moved again when he was asked to survey the Stewart Ranch in Las Vegas, Nevada in 1902. In 1904, he purchased land from Helen Stewart in what is now downtown Las Vegas, and he called it McWilliamstown. McWilliams participated in the 1905 land auction that helped establish the Las Vegas townsite.

McWilliams feuded with the Union Pacific Railroad over several issues, including water rights, land claims, and timber claims. His reputation in Southern Nevada was built in part on defeating the railroad when it was dumping waste in Las Vegas Creek and forcing the railroad to pump water into "Old Town," or present day Las Vegas.

McWilliams died in 1941. J. T. McWilliams Elementary School was named in his honor.
